POOR SISTER'S HAPPY HOME.

CASTORIA

One of the most hopeless tasks that can fall to a loving woman is to search a great city for a sister lost in her childhood. Mrs. Margaret Kelley, of Lawrence street. Flushing, L. I., has a sister somewhere in New York and has searched for her in vain.

Mrs. Kelley was brought up a poor girl, married a mechanic, and lives in a humble but happy home. Her sister was adopted by one of New York's richest and most influential families, reared in a luxurious home, and finely educated.

Her elegant carriage may have dashed by her humble sister a hundred times as Mrs. Kelley walked along the street.

But her tender heart and her womanings won her the honest admiration.

Mrs. Kelley walked along the street.

And if the rich woman saw her unknown sister at all it was to think of her as some poor woman of the "other of the Long Island Railroad Company."

But her tender heart and her womaniness won her the bonest admiration and love of a man. That man is her known sister at all it was to think of her as some poor woman of the "other of the Long Island Railroad Company."

SEARCH FOR SISTER.

SEARCH FOR SISTER.

Mrs. Kelley is still searching for her lost sister. She would blush to think that her sister's wealth and position would be any bar between them. She longs to know what became of the little girl, taken from the convent years ago by a rich New York family. She sighs for a sister's sympainy!

The story is a romance.

One day thirty-seven years ago, Timothy Harinett, of New York, came home from work and told his wife he felt ill. "I have worked too hard, in the hope of making a pretty home for you and the girls," he said. "My heart has given out and I am dying. Take care of the girls as long as you can. Make each of them as true a woman as you are, little wife." And soon he passed away.

"Mate ma' am. Can you give me three cents to help me set a head on the passed away."

"Kate, ma'am. Can you give me three cents to help me set a head on the passed away."

Make each of them as true a woman as you are, little wife." And soon he passed away.

Little is known of Mrs. Hartnett except that she wore her fingers to the bone trying to care for the bables. One morning the reighbors found her dead in her bed with little Katle asleep on her weary arms.

Make each of them as true a woman an?"

"Kate, ma'am. Can you give me three cents to help me get a bed for to-night?"

"Kate, did you say? My God, woman, is it Kate? Were you brought up in the Houston Street Convent? Ars you my sister Kate?"

The woman, seeing a chance of creating sympathy, said: "Like as not," weary arms. LOOKED DEEP IN HER EYES.

Katle had gone.

She has never seen her since. But on the white table at the head of Maggie's bed was a stick of red and white candy, and in a scrawling hand this farewell note: "For Maggie from Katle. When I am a great lady I will come hack and many or to you."

It is claimed that although built of staff the groups of figures can be trunsported with but little demage.

NOTED ST. LOUIS Mors.

Well Known in This City.

ST. LOUIS, April 20 -Mrs. Minnie Lawrence Siegrist, wife of Henry A Slegrist and only daughter of Dr. J. J. Lawrence, died at her father's residence here Sunday morning of inflammatory rheumatism.

Mrs. Siegrist was known to frequenters of the fashionable Eastern watering piaces as a strikingly handsome woman.

Her gowns were superb. Dr. Lawrence is a multi-millionaire, and he lavished wealth on his beautiful daughter. She was a frequent visitor n New York.

Two years ago she and Mr. Siegrist created a sensation at the Waldorf. Retiring to their apartments from the dining-room Mrs. Siegrist's cries brought guests and attendants to their room. Mr. Siegrist was bleeding from a jagged wound in the neck. It was said Mrs. Siegrist stabbed him with a hatpin. She said he slipped, breaking and cutting himself on a water pitcher as he fell. The pitcher lay in fragments over

In 1898 a jury of fashionable milliners and dressmakers pronounced Mrs. Slegrist the best-dressed woman at the St.

That Sreat Sale of 5,000 Bunches of Imported Flowers for Trimming, which was begun this morning, will be continued to-morrow and until the big stock is disposed of, which won't be long, judging by the way they are being bought up by an appreciative public. Here are full particulars concerning this purchase and sale:

We bought for spot cash the entire stock of a leading importer, not at Sec. or 40c. on the collar, but at less than 25c. on the dollar. It is the greatest bargain in Flowers for hat trimming we ever saw, the greatest values that you ever saw, too. Pive thou and dozen bunches is a vast quantity; no responsible firm would buy such a let unless the price was down to next to nothing, as it was in this case. And yet the goods are all brand new, the very latest, very swellest things in the country, the very same that at this moment are being sold at other stores at full prices. We are going to sell them all this week until every piece has found a new owner at prices that will create a profound smaation. Just glance at this!

HOME FOR THE ORPHANS. They laid the faithful woman beside her husband. And then came the Sisters of the Convent of Mercy in East Houston street and offered the three girls a home. Mary, Katte and Maggie were glad to seek shelter under the wing of the Church. Maggie, who was the baby and only five years old, remembers the day that Katle came in to her bed one morning and kissed her many times and salt: "Maggie orled so hard that all the girls in the dormitory awoke and cried too, and the nums who tried to stop toem caught the infection and wept with the children. That was a terrible morning for Baby Maggie. She twined her little white arms around her sister's neck and vowed nething should part them.
